Your Baby's Health

By DR. MORRIS FISHBURN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

Long before there were physicians, or midwives, no doubt many women bore children successfully without the help of either. Frequently, however, these mothers suffered unnecessarily, and sometimes they became ill or died as a result of complications which today are well controlled.

As human life became more complex, and as conditions of living changed, the medical complications of childbirth became more difficult. Crowding of human beings brought greater chance of infection.

There is a saying in medicine that a badly taught or ignorant midwife can kill more women than a highly educated doctor can cure.

If women made sure of their ability to bear children successfully and without complications by having a suitable physical examination beforehand, if they consulted competent medical advisers when they knew they were going to have children, and if they followed medical advice carefully through the entire period before childbirth, the number of deaths would be greatly diminished and much unnecessary illness later would be prevented.

A midwife cannot, because of her limited education, be as competent as a well-trained doctor. The most important training that she can secure is that which gives her sufficient knowledge and judgment to know when to call for medical assistance.

Your Children

By Olive Roberts Barton

Spring may be a favorite season for poets but it is a hard time for children. True, there is a warm and gentle feeling that begins to permeate their blood—a wanderlust that seizes their minds through their legs are too tired to do anything about it. They spend energy freely in marbles, jumping rope, and baseball. Then suddenly they are tired. Too tired to hurry when you need a box of baking powder from the store for the luncheon biscuits.

Do not scold them. The children aren't being lazy when they meander. Spring has them in her toils and they can't speed up.

Once upon a time our grandmothers suggested sulphur and molasses, sassafras, and sarsaparilla for "thinning" the blood. Maybe it helped but it never stopped any boy from dreaming about the cool green water in the creek at the edge of the town, or the tall trees in the woods to the south, where he could climb and sit and think. The old remedies never made any child study any harder.

Thoughts are far afield. In the spring a small boy or girl's fancy plays truant though he sits at his desk, a geography in front of him, watching the pink and blue and green spots on the map and thinking of utterly foreign territory.

Mothers are concerned with housecleaning on the warm days of April. Children and fathers' souls alike are harried by ladders, bare floors, boiled dinner, carpets to beat, lawns to clean, old leaves to burn, and an endless procession of errands to run. Johnnie and Mary, accustomed to finding a savory lunch waiting for them at noon, quite likely will be told to make their own sandwiches from the ham and cheese that are still wrapped in the grocery paper, and to open the milk that the milkman left an hour ago.

Housecleaning Can Wait
Yes, spring is hard on children. Their minds and the routine of their living are upset at the same time.

By the time the hot summer months come along their bodies have adjusted to the change in temperature. The same acclimatization has occurred in their parents. Everyone swings into rhythm and the house moves smoothly.

Spring, being what it is—a time of lovely enchantment when leaves are growing, flowers are returning, and there is a wistful, haunting magic in the winds—and yet a time of physical inertia—it would be far better if mothers would not spoil their own and their families' Aprils with an over-supply of housecleaning.

There are cooler months for that. An orderly house is a lovely thing, but when cleanliness becomes a god who sets his own serving time, he may demand undue sacrifice.

A Book a Day
By Bruce Catton
Those people who would like to see the "hide of that eminent publisher, William Randolph Hearst, tucked neatly on some handy fence, likely will be interested in "Imperial Hearst," by Ferdinand Lundberg (Equinox Press, $2.50).

"The jacket of this book states that it is an 'unauthorized' biography. The warning is needless. A reader won't peruse a dozen pages without discovering that no one connected with Mr. Hearst could have dreamed of authorizing this book or anything in it.

Mr. Lundberg undertakes to show that Mr. Hearst's career was a struggle against the public interest. He does, at times, try to prove too much—as, for instance, when he suggests that maybe it was Mr. Hearst himself who blew up the Maine and brought on the Spanish-American war—but even when due allowances are made for excessive zeal, the author has painted a damning picture.

Step by step, he analyzes the publisher's activities, from his beginnings in San Francisco to his present eminence. His actions as a newspaper proprietor, as an employer of labor, as a monopolist, and as a politician all are put under the microscope.

Newsprint being inflammable, I can't put down here the exact words of Mr.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
LINDA BOURNE, 20 years old, pretty and socially prominent in the little middlewestern town of Newtown, meets PETER GARDNER, a political reporter, when she goes to the Blue office with an announcement about a charity bazaar.

The same day Linda's father, in financial difficulties, kills himself.

Peter goes to the Bourne home to break the news to Linda. Misunderstanding, she treats him cruelly. Later she apologizes, and confides to Peter that her father's money is gone and she must find a job.

"I don't know what to do," Linda says, and Peter, assuming himself a millionaire, replies, "You could marry me."

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER III

LINDA wasn't quite sure she had heard the words correctly. Peter himself almost doubted that he had said them—"You could marry me." He didn't want a wife. He wasn't in love with Linda Bourne. He hadn't given any romantic thought to her.

Whatever Linda's reactions were, she did not betray them. She knew why he had asked her to marry him, and she knew, too, how to reply.

"That was exactly the right thing to say to a lady in distress," she told him, "but I am not to be outdone in gallantry. I thank you for your kind invitation and regret that I cannot accept." Then she laughed gaily.

So she had thought it was only a gallant speech! Pete stifled the smallest sigh of relief.

It was easier after that for Linda to talk to him. She had established a lighter tone and the tense strain of the hour they had spent "displeased" itself. She told him that she was planning to sell the house, but until it was sold she would stay on there with the housekeeper who, in time, would retire and live with a married daughter.

"In the meantime," she said, "I've been thinking of things I could do. It can't be so terribly hard to be a secretary. I've had lots of experience at the League and I thought perhaps I could get through a quick course at a business college."

PETE had heard a good many stories from girls who had lost and were unable to find secretarial jobs, but he hadn't the heart to discourage her when he had nothing else to offer.

"Or perhaps," Linda chattered on, "I might try to get a job coaching dramatic courses. You know—Little Theatre things."

Pete was glad the subject had changed to something about which he could talk. "You're interested in the theater, aren't you?"

"Crazy about it," she told him, and added hastily, "Not acting, you know. I couldn't do that. I'm not pretty."

Pete thought she was more than pretty when her face lit up with enthusiasm and that her delicate, expressive hands spoke as eloquently as her voice. "But dramatic expression, plot development—those are the things I love. I haven't had any experience except with school clubs and things."

"And you wrote a play for the bazaar?" he reminded her.

"Oh, that!" She dismissed that,

She unlocked the big desk and drew a sheaf of papers from it.

She didn't want to think of it. It was too closely associated with the dreadful week before.

"Did you ever do anything else like that?" Pete asked her.

She didn't answer him immediately. She crossed the room, unlocked the desk, and drew a sheaf of papers from it. Then she shyly resumed her seat beside him. Pete had never seen a girl who was shy, and it suddenly occurred to him that he had never enjoyed himself before as much as this evening.

"Yes, I have," she answered his question finally. "I've written a movie scenario, but I'm not going to ask you to read it. I know it isn't any good," and, as he reached for it, "No, please."

"Then, tell me about it," he urged.

"You'll think it's all pretty silly, but it has been fun and it's kept me from thinking . . . thinking things I didn't want to. One day at the hair-dresser's I picked up a movie magazine. Hair-dressers have the very latest movie magazines," she assured him gravely and he said he'd have to speak to his barber about that; he was getting tired of the Barber's Manual.

"You ought to, because your big chance may come that way! Well, I read in this magazine that there was a contest with a big prize and a job in Hollywood waiting for the winner who submits the best scenario. So I've been playing with the idea."

"Finished it?"

"Yes," she said. "It's finished, but

It was a date and, thinking of it, Pete pushed his hat a little more to the side as he walked through the quiet town, whistling on his way home. He didn't go directly home; he stopped at a newsstand and bought all the Hollywood magazines.

Linda wanted to think of him after he left. She wanted to go back, step by step, over all that had been said between them before he had surprised her by his half-serious proposal, but she felt asleep, thinking about Dix and wondering how much time would elapse before she heard from him.

The next day she wrote to Dix on her new, black-bordered stationery. It was a little note thanking him for his expression of sympathy, and adding that, since she could not go out, she would like to have him for tea on Sunday. Linda forgot her date with Pete Gardner.

She dropped the note in the box and then went home to plan for Sunday. She must not be too sombre; she would wear a smart little black velvet frock and she would fill the house with flowers. She knew that her mourning would have a deep influence on Dix, and the enchantment of their companionship had been pored by Galaty.

There were four more days until Sunday. Every time the telephone rang, Linda's heart jumped to her throat as she took the receiver from the hook. She sorted the mail with trembling fingers and tried to put time from her mind. Dix was busy. He might not have received her note. He might be out of town. He might be ill. He wouldn't write. He wouldn't telephone. He couldn't disregard her note. He wouldn't want to, she kept assuring herself with faltering belief.

"Business is Business," the Big Man said. But it's something that's more far more. For it makes sweet gardens of deserts dead. And cities it built now roar Where once the deer and the grey wolf ran. From the pioneer's swift advance; Business is Magic that toils for man; Business is True Romance. And those who make it a ruthless fight Have only themselves to blame. If they feel no whit of the keen delight. In playing the Bigger Game. The game that calls on the heart and head. The best of man's strength and nerve; "Business is Business," the Big Man said. "And that Business is to serve." —Selected Goodlett of Ozark, Mrs. J. S. Wilson Sr., of Columbus, Mrs. Thalia LeMay of Lewisville and Mrs. Emory Thompson, Miss Josephine Thompson and Mrs. Helen Mosher of Fulton.

Mrs. Jack Meek and daughter, Carolyn of Bradley, arrived Thursday evening for a week's visit with Mr. and Mrs. K. G. McRoe and other home folks.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Oglesby of Texarkana were in the city Thursday evening to hear Dr. Stuart Oglesby make the annual address before Hope's high school graduates. Mr. and Mrs. Oglesby are the kind of "former citizens" who will always find a welcome awaiting them in the "old home town." Stuart and Will are sons of the late S. R. Oglesby and Mrs. Oglesby was closely identified with everything that was worthwhile in the up-building of our city, they are also uncles of Ike T. Bell Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Fisher of Rison, Ark., announce the arrival of a daughter, on Thursday, April 23. Mrs. Fisher will be remembered as Miss Thelma Barber, formerly of this city.

The members of the Thursday Night Bridge club and two special guests, Misses Katherine Briant and Helen Bowden, were guests of Mrs. Clyde Coffee for their regular weekly game. With Mrs. Bill Wray scoring high. Following the game the hostess served a delicious salad course.

As special compliment to their son and brother, Garrett Story Jr., who is a member of the Hope high school graduating class, Mr. and Mrs. Garrett Story Sr., and Miss Harriet Story held "open house" for the class members Thursday evening at the Story home on West Second street. The rooms were decorated throughout with pink roses, and snap dragon predominating in the sun parlor where dancing was enjoyed, and Mrs. Roy Stephenson and Miss Mary Billingsley presided over the punch bowl.

At the final meeting of the Hope high school faculty, on Friday morning, Miss Beryl Henry, city school superintendent, was hostess at a beautifully appointed breakfast at the home of E. C. Cottage. The tables were centered with bowls of lovely vari-colored pansies.

The Methodist choir will not meet for regular practice Friday night, but will meet at 10:30 Sunday morning at the Methodist parsonage.

Tent Revival Is Begun at Emmet and Her Garden

Preaching Services Are Held There Every Night at 7:30 o'Clock

The first service of the community revival at Emmet was held Wednesday night in the Methodist church. Future services will be held in the large tent which is located next to the Emmet High School. Comfortable seating has been arranged for a large crowd.

Evangelists C. A. Calhoun, of Haynesville, La., and W. A. Cross, Magnolia, Miss., will have charge of the preaching. Special singing will be rendered in all of the services. Rev. Cross is a chalk artist and will render special chalk-talks each evening.

Community leaders are anticipating a great revival. They are cordially extending an invitation to people of all churches in the surrounding communities and towns to attend. The meeting is purported to be non-denominational and has as its objective the deepening of the spiritual life of all.

Booster services will begin at 7:30 each night and lead into the preaching services. The prayerful interest of all Christians is highly desired.

Weekly Sunday School Lesson
By WM. E. GILROY, D. D. Editor of Advance

Jesus Views Wealth and Poverty Text: Luke 16:19-31 International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for April 26

The title of our lesson is, "Jesus Views Wealth and Poverty." He still sees both, for in every country in the world today, even in America with its untold resources, immense wealth and stark poverty are found side by side.

We may be sure, too, that Jesus looks at both as He did when He was on earth; that He sees the poor in the one hand, and, on the other, the unwillingness to meet it, even on the part of those surfeited with this world's goods.

The spirit of the teaching of Jesus is against all hatred and class warfare, but there has been on scorn more intense in revolutionary literature, no denunciation more severe, than that which Jesus brought to bear upon the selfish and surfeited rich who allowed their wealth to clog and destroy all that might have been purest and best in their own lives, while, at the same time they allowed their fellow men to exist in want and suffering.

Intensity of this attitude toward the rich and the poor is put with great vividness into this story that we call the "Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus." The contrasts are extreme: the rich man clothed in purple and fine linen, gorging himself on luxurious food, while the beggar lies at his gate, full of sores, desiring only to be fed with the crumbs from the rich man's table.

There is a great leveler, however. Death reduces the rich and the poor to like estate as far as this world is concerned; but Jesus suggests the contrast that may be in store beyond the grave, the beggar in the symbolic blessedness of Abraham's bosom, and the selfish rich man in the torments of hell.

The lesson of it all would seem to be very clear and pointed, and yet Jesus in the parable indicates exactly the truth that we see exemplified on every hand.

For generations men and women have been reading and listening to this story, and yet how little effect it has had in changed lives and attitudes. We have made immense gains within our own generation in recognition of the responsibility of society as a whole. Today where men and women are denied employment and reasonable opportunities of self-support, we have recognized the inevitable obligation of society to come to their aid.

Where there is a sad reflection that, perhaps there is murmuring against society; making such provision for its needy citizens, the murmuring has come, for the most part, from the wealthy and powerful, those most able to bear the burden.

It is of little use to study these great and instructive stories of Scripture unless we endeavor to use them in terms of the life of today, and strive earnestly to apply them to the relationships of modern man.

A Modern Eve and Her Garden

One of springtime's most attractive gardens undoubtedly is this one, surrounding pretty Eleanor Akers of Dallas, Tex. Her beach corsage is entirely of bluebonnets, the state flower. To wear it, Eleanor, a Rangerette at the Texas Centennial fair, had to abandon her customary chaps. But, never fear, they'll be back.

Hen Chooses Both Time and Place

White Leghorn Will Lay Eggs Only in Cellar of Texas House

WEATHERFORD, Texas—(AP)—W. M. Gibson, a farmer in Parker county, has a white leghorn hen that believes in direct action. It will lay only in an egg case that Gibson keeps in the cellar of his house for storing freshly gathered eggs. If the door is closed the hen cackles until it is opened.

County Agent's Column

Bordeaux mixture is the standard fungicide used in the summer for spraying a great many plants. It should not, however, be used on peaches, but may be used on apples after the first two sprays, and on roses, sour cherries, Irish potatoes, etc.

The following directions for making Bordeaux are taken from Extension Circular No. 143, a copy of which may be secured from your county agent.

Bordeaux Mixture. Bluestone and milk of lime are the ingredients used and the method of mixing is the same regardless of the proportions.

The bluestone is dissolved in water at the rate of one pound per gallon of water. This is done by suspending the bluestone in a bag so that the bottom of the sack barely touches the surface of the water. The strong bluestone solution should be kept in a wooden container such as a barrel.

The stone lime should be carefully slacked; that is milk of lime made to contain one pound of lime for each gallon of water. The best method of mixing is to fill the sprayer tank with the required amount of water, add the proper amount of strong bluestone solution (3 or 4 gallons to 50 gallons of water) and start the engine. The milk of lime (4 gallons to 50 gallons of spray mixture) is then poured through the screen accompanied by the back flow of dilute bluestone solution from the pump. The agitation should continue until thoroughly mixed.

When a spray tank is not used, small amounts may be made by diluting the bluestone solution with the required amount of water and stirring in the milk of lime. Strong bluestone solution should never be added to strong lime solution, preferably not to dilute lime. Once made, Bordeaux Mixture can not be kept longer than about three hours.

Hydrated lime may be used instead of unslacked lime in making Bordeaux Mixture. In this case use one-third more hydrated lime than is recommended for lump lime.

Should Save Oil
Poultry raisers should save the burnt-out oil drained from the crankcase of their cars. The burnt-out oil is one of the best things which can be used to rid poultry houses of mites. The oil should be painted on the perch poles and roosting quarters with a brush or old broom.

Carbolineum is an effective remedy for mites also and will control them if painted on the perch poles once a week.

Separated housing quarters will keep the mites from nesting and treating with

Big Crowd Turns Out at the Arena

Jess Willard Referees Matches at S. Walnut Street Arena

A large crowd turned out Thursday night for the first open air wrestling show at the new American Legion stadium on South Walnut street where Jess Willard, former world's heavyweight boxing champion, appeared as the referee in the main event.

Willard was introduced by Leo Robins of Hope. The former boxing king had little trouble with the burly Nolen, who exhibited more ability as a clown than he did as a wrestler.

Neither of the two matches were up to par. Toots Estes won the main event from Patty Nolen by taking two straight falls.

In the semi-final Pat O'Brien and Jack Lang, substituting for Leslie Wolf, fought to a draw. Lang, whose real name is Estes, younger brother of Toots, took the first fall.

In the final few seconds, O'Brien clamped on a back-body drop and the match ended in a draw.

Officers 'Chip in', Pay Widow's Tax

City Refuses to Accept Tax From Struggling Mother of 4

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla.—(AP)—A widow who said she supported four children on earnings of $5.50 weekly asked the city commission for permission to pay her taxes in installments of 50 cents a week.

Instead the commissioners and others made up a fund and gave her a "paid-in-full" receipt for her $6.68 tax bill.

and allowed to dry out thoroughly before setting the hens, no trouble should be experienced. It is possible for mites to live and thrive in an oil-treated nest as they can live and breed on the nesting material, getting to the hen to feed and going back on the straw to lay their eggs. For this reason the straw or material used in the nests should be watched carefully, and changed and burned frequently.

Detective's Son Held in Kidnaping

Ellis Parker, Jr., Indicted for Seizure of Paul H. Wendel

NEW YORK—Ellis H. Parker Jr., 24, son of the famous Burlington county, New Jersey, chief detective, and four others, were indicted by the Kings county grand jury Thursday afternoon for the kidnaping and torture of Paul H. Wendel.

That witnesses before the grand jury had alleged young Parker with an "aiding conspiracy" in which Wendel was torn into making a false confession to the Lindbergh baby murder, became evident in the rapidly with which events developed.

Since Tuesday the grand jury has heard an array of witnesses, including Wendel. Witnesses are said to have definitely placed Parker at the house in Brooklyn's Sheepshead Bay district, where Wendel was held prisoner for 10 days.

Reporters who tried to locate the Parkers in Mount Holly succeeded only in finding Parker St., who refused to comment. He was not sure where his son could be found.

Behind the Scenes in Washington

By Rodney Dutcher

fore congressional committees last summer.

New Dealers and newspaper correspondents living in the Virginia town led the fight against enforcement of a power plant which they ascribed would seriously increase an already bad smoke nuisance.

Chief U. S. Forester F. A. Silcox, arbitrator in the recent New York elevator strike, was chief spokesman.

President John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers, Edwin S. Smith, member of the National Labor Relations Board, Indian Commissioner John Collier, Admiral Perceval S. Rosier, R. G. Bolling, brother of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, and more than 50 others signed a telegram of protest to Hopson.

They invaded a city council meeting and promised to go back to candles and kerosene lamps if they weren't heeded.

The company capitulated, submitting new engineering plans which is promised in writing—would eliminate smoke and cinders.

Now the "Kerosene and Candle Committee," as it calls itself, plans a crusade for lower rates.

Washington, across the river, pays 3.9 cents a kilowatt hour, whereas Alexandria's rate is said to average around 7 1/2 cents.

In Iceland, codfish are used as a medium of exchange.

Black-Draught

With the right sort of food and proper exercise, constipation might be rare, but in actual living conditions, how few manage to escape it!

Mr. Clyde Martin, of Ona, W. Va., recently very aptly wrote that "constipation is the root of a lot of sicknesses, but if Black-Draught is taken right it will keep down constipation."

"I let myself get constipated," he explains, "and my system filled with impure matter. I feel bloated, take cold easily, and feel out of sorts in a lot of ways. I will take about two good doses of Black-Draught. It seems to cleanse my whole system and I feel like doing my work."

Sold in 25-cent packages.

Embezzlement Is Denied by Sheriff

Lee County Official As- serts Others Kept Books for Him

MARIANNA, Ark. —(P)—Former Sheriff and Collector Zoll C. Smith in two hours of testimony Thursday denied charges that he embezzled $8,552.21 in public funds. Testimony in his trial was practically completed when court adjourned for the day. The trial is expected to reach a jury in circuit court here Saturday.

Smith admitted that a shortage existed, but denied knowledge of how it occurred, contending that books of his office were kept by assistants.

Chief County Accountant J. Bryan Sims of the state comptroller's department was the state's principal witness, testifying to shortages he said were found in his former collector's accounts over the past three years.

Sims said that Smith's accounts showed shortages of $8,700 in personal property taxes collected in 1934 and 1935, that records showed approximately $2,000 collected in 1936 was credited to collections the preceding year and that $1,900 was collected this year for which there was no credit.

Auditors Frank Storey and Finis McCoy also testified concerning records of Smith's office. Clyde Andrews, former deputy of Smith's office, said that a shortage was evidenced by checks and due bills placed in the cash drawer by the former sheriff.

Several persons testified for the state that they paid delinquent poll taxes during 1934, for which the state charges Smith did not charge himself and did not remit to the county treasurer.

Accountants F. P. Palmer and Frank Jones in testifying for the defense said they audited Smith's books for the period from April 2 to 13 of this year and that they balanced.

Historic Rocks Go Into Stone Wall

Minnesota Man Gathers Together Stones From Famous Sites

CHATFIELD, Minn. —(P)—History is interwoven through masonry in the stone wall built by George A. Haven, Chatfield bank president.

A portion of Plymouth rock imbedded in the wall and pebbles from the dungeon keep of the Tower of London are among pieces in the wall.

In addition, there are rocks from the Civil war battle site at Lockout Mountain, a cannon ball, spent shell and a tablet carrying the inscription: "Up this road, June 22, 1861, marched Company A, 2nd Minnesota Vol. Inf. to serve in defense of the Union."

The coldest town on the British Isles is Braemar, which has an average yearly temperature of 11.3 degrees above zero.

Low-Priced, Speedy Sky Ford Soon to Make Bow

Presenting the new Ford V8—of the air! Pictured above at Detroit, after its inspection by Henry and Edsel Ford, the new light plane, which has a top speed of 100 miles an hour and a cruising speed of 90, soon will go on production in Lincoln, Neb., to sell at less than $1000. Equipped with a typical automobile motor that can be serviced at any Ford service station, or replaced at a cost of less than $50, the new air Ford can travel 350 miles on 20 gallons of gas. It already has passed tests of the Department of Commerce, which purchased the plane shown above.

German Colonies May Be Returned

British Rumored Likely to Take This Action in Africa

LONDON, Eng. — The House of Commons reflected again Thursday growing concern of possible government plan to hand back mandated territory in Africa to Germany to satisfy the Nazi urge for expansion, and Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, answering scorching questions, would not deny that such a move might be taken in the future.

Tanganyika and other former German colonies taken from the Germans after the World war are chiefly under fire for possible return to Adolf Hitler, it is apparent from the repeated agitation about Tanganyika appearing in the London press. Feeling seems to be growing that the British government would give these African mandates back if the pressure became too great.

Winston Churchill, championing augmented taxation and a heavier budget, said the expenditure is urgent needed to meet exceptional public danger. Churchill reiterated that Germany spent $4,000,000,000 last year for armament and war-like preparation, citing that this is a menace to England.

Again affirming that the danger point was not far off, Churchill said: "Europe is approaching a climax which I believe will be reached during the next four years. Either there will be a melting of hearts and joining hands, or an explosion and catastrophe, the course of which no imagination can measure. I believe also that a strongly armed Britain, resolutely may turn the dread scale between the blessing and cursing of mankind."

McGuffey Reader

Pennsylvania the ruined log house in which William was born, and making reprints of the books.

In September, 1934, Mr. Ford personally dedicated a monument erected to McGuffey on the site of his birthplace near Claysville, Pa.

Son of a famous Indian scout, William Holmes McGuffey was born in 1800. His mother taught him letters, but had not enough money to send him to school.

Riding past the McGuffey home one day in 1818, a preacher heard a woman earnestly praying for education for her children. Charitably, he entered young William in the Old Stone Academy at Darlington, Pa.

Later, William chored his way through Washington College (now W. & J.), and tutored at a Paris, Ky., private academy.

Ordained by Church At 26, he was named professor of ancient languages at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio. A year later, he was ordained by the Presbyterians and, three years after that, was given Miami's chair of mental philosophy. It was then he began writing his four famed readers.

Though McGuffey's writings later achieved a total sale of 122,000,000 copies, they did not make him rich. His publishers, Truman & Smith Co., of Cincinnati, paid him 10 per cent royalty on all copies until the sale reached $1000. But the firm later established an annuity for him.

After William McGuffey left Cincinnati, the fifth reader (The Theological Guide) was written by his brother, Alexander. From this material came the fifth and sixth readers.
